Book by Ziak, Rex

A little different take on the famous Lewis and Clark journey, In full view: A true and accurate account of Lewis and Clark by Rex Ziak. The Pacific Northwest author has studied Lewis & Clark's journals and lived in the Pacific Northwest. He has walked the beaches and traveled the river so his knowledge is close up and personal to relate the travels in which some of the details were not always known. With beautiful photographs, wonderful layouts and accurate maps, the author weaves the story complete with quotes from the journals. This is a treasure and is a must-read for the history buff. Local libraries and schools will find this very informative. As the author tells of the early windy, rainy travels where the clothing is soaking wet, along with the bedding "the reader will shiver knowing the harsh conditions experienced by the travelers. Then the waves beat against the rocks and the tides makes the river rise, there is nowhere to sleep on the rocks and the mountainside so steep there is nowhere else to go " what they endured! This history reads like fiction, but you know it is all true. I love history and you will love this fine book!

If you want to read a serious, interesting, readable, entertaining book on the last phase of the heroic Lewis and Clark expedition, this is your book.

This account of the last 2 months arriving at the Pacific coast, far exceeded my expectations. Mr. Ziak's knowledge of the area described as well as the included pictures has been well researched. I highly recommend this book for the L&C fan as well as the novice.

Wonderful Lewis and Clark Detail as they approach and reach the Pacific. Excellent detail on the authors research and how he arrived at his conclusions. A must-read for those interested in an accurate account of their days approaching, and days at, the Pacific coast.
