Amber is homeschooled her entire life and is even accepted into Harvard early, but she begged her parents for a normal high school experience. First day moving in, she makes friends with the neighborhood kids, which is all boys and one girl. Of course, The most popular boy lived next door, he's also a football player, Nick. This year Nick decides to focus on his studies more than girls. His plan to get the other girls off his back is to pretend to date Amber. Amber goes for this idea because it will give her an inside view on relationships (homeschooled remember). Spoiler They actually fall for each other while pretending. It's told from both Amber and Nick's point of view. Story is a little high school but it is young adult and based in high school. Writing is decent and leaves room for the author to explain with the other characters.

Could have been a good story if the main character's name didn't switch from Amber to Amanda and even Amand. The author left note shortcuts in the story so if you clicked on them you could see what needed to be fixed. The story felt a little one dimensional instead of details you get a shirt and jeans. The sexual tension was not there although the author tried Great characters in a sweet high school story. This was a fun book to read. The only problem was that I was not ready for it to be over.

This was a good cute read. The story flowed great. Will be reading the others in this series.

Its a short story but easy to read for time pass. one thing i really hated was when the authour made mistakes abt heroines name couple of times..one time she wrote amada, and another time amanda..which is not her name at all. i mean seriously the author needs to proofread and so do editor

I thought the characters and story line were amazing. First love is always the best, am I right or am I right?

This was a cute and sweet read. Amber Johnson has been living in New York City with her Columbia University Professor mother and Mystery Author father. She has been homeschooled. She decides she wants to go to a normal school and be normal for a change so her parents uproot all of them and they move to a small town in Washington state. She moves next door to Marla and Jason Turner and their parents. Jason and his best friends Tank, Nick, and Luke are popular and great looking guys. Jason's great looking, the Star Quarterback, and women just flock to him. Amber's quite intelligent and her parents have had her on a trajectory to go to college at Harvard. She's already been offered to get in but her parents want her to wait since she's still pretty naive. She was hoping that she could just go to a school in NYC but her parents want her to experience other things and places. She's instantly attracted and interested in Jason but she's not want to fall all over herself for a guy or anyone. She thinks Jason is crazy for wanting to have a "fake" relationship. Jason's so busy and has decided he doesn't want to date his senior year of high school. He's got school, football practice, and sometimes working for his father so he doesn't have much time for anything else. The school's 3 Queen Bee's Cindy, Sheryl, and Julie all want Jason to choose them to go out with and they think it's their right. From the first time he lays eyes on Amber, he's attracted and interested but doesn't want the complications. So he comes up with an idea for Amber to be his "fake" girlfriend which will get all the other girls to leave him alone. He didn't expect to actually care about her and for her to be stuck in his head. Worth reading.

This sort of fluffy, predictable, teen romance has its place even though most of them will ever be considered great literature. But this was sloppier and more bland than most. The characters, setting, and plot were just so completely blank. None of them have any defining traits or are explored in any way - its all about the utterly predictable and family-friendly plot which barrels down the track to the obvious conclusion. The main characters really have no reason to be together other than thinking the other person is "hot" (probably because they don't really have defined personalities, interests, or conflicts). Plus the whole book was slapped together so fast that there are actually feedback notes left in the text - somebody gave feedback about consistent terminology yet ignored the bad grammar, sentence fragments, and questionable understanding of how punctuation works. (Commas are not confetti - you don't sprinkle them everywhere just to make things more fun. Also, sentences that are questions normally end in this symbol: '?') Alas, I grabbed the whole 3-book series for a plane trip and I can say that things get a little better in the later books, but all of them are still at the quality level of "it passed spell-check, must be great!" If you are a pre-teen girl with low standards, I guess this will keep you vaguely entertained for an hour or two.
